

ART SY

15 New York Shows You Need to See This June

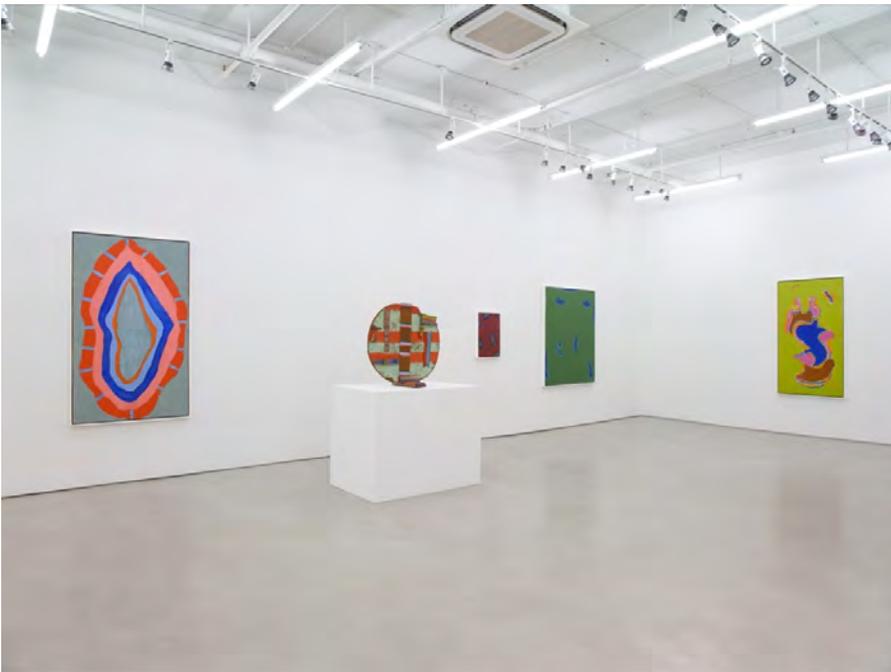

Summer may bring a slowdown in the art world, but there's still plenty to see at the city's museums and galleries. Below, we share our picks for what you won't want to miss in June, from Martine Syms's solo museum debut at MoMA to Travis Boyer's conceptual reimagining of the legacy of Mexican pop star Selena.

BY SCOTT INDRISEK AND CASEY LESSER

MAY 30TH, 2017 5:41 PM

Betty Parsons at Alexander Gray Associates

MAY 25–JUL. 14 • 510 WEST 26TH STREET

Installation view of Betty Parsons, "Invisible Presence" at Alexander Gray Associates.
©Betty Parsons Foundation. Courtesy of Alexander Gray Associates.

Spanning Parsons's six-decade career, this show takes its name from a phrase the artist coined in 1977, "the invisible presence," referring to what she ultimately aimed to convey in her work. The legendary artist and gallerist's thoughtful work spans large abstract paintings in vibrant hues; elegant wood assemblages; and charming travel sketches, watercolor vignettes depicting slices of life in Africa, Europe, Mexico, and Japan. —CL