

Headed to Miami? Here Are the Gold Coast Gallery Shows Not to Miss, From Palm Beach to Wynwood

November 24, 2022

By Katy Diamond Hamer

Rafael Lozano-Hemmer, Pulse Topology (2021) is currently on view at Superblue in Miami. Courtesy of the artist and Superblue.

Miami Art Week is back, with so much more to see and do beyond Art Basel. The city's gallery scene is as strong as ever, with a spate of buzzy openings next week at the likes of David Castillo and Nina Johnson. And meanwhile, the last couple of years have seen blue-chip names (see: Pace, Acquavella, White Cube) open locations nearby in Palm Beach. Here are our picks of buzzy gallery shows to see in both towns during the fairs.

“Ronny Quevedo: ule ole allez” at Locust Projects

Locust Projects is hosting three separate exhibitions for Miami Art Week before relocating to a new location (double the size) at 297 NE 67th Street. In the main gallery, Ronny Quevedo is presenting his performance-based installation ule ole allez. The Ecuador-born, New York-based artist used paper and canvas to trace the footsteps of local futsal (indoor soccer) leagues as they played the beautiful game.

3852 North Miami Avenue, Miami; November 29, 2022–February 4, 2023.

Ronny Quevedo, no hay medio tiempo (after Glissant and Quevedo) (2019). Courtesy of the artist and Alexander Gray Associates, New York.